hi, in my eyes it's definitely an improvement but if i'm being honest i was expecting a better result after reading the graft count and seeing the before pics. your hair / skin contrast is, as i see it, optimal - so i was hoping for a better optical density. if you say it's also 22 month post surgery we should see the final result. but as i said, definitely an improvement you can be happy about!and if there's still budget and grafts left and in case you're not happy with the outcome, maybe you can go for a second one for frontal & crown area (only my opinion).

Sorry, but in my opinion the result is quite suboptimal, particularly for that high amount of grafts. Especially the front area hasn't the density I would expect.

I can't see what your donor area is still able to give. But for that second shot I would definitely go to a top doctor where you expect reasonable results.

I find the result below average. For a second treatment I would not go to the same clinic, even if it might be free of charge. ASMED used to be decent, but they became a mass clinic in the last years.

You should be aware that some people are not made for hair transplants. There is a chance that the growth rate in your second surgery is not optimal, even with a doctor like bisanga.
