Spirolactone (Spiro) is a synthetic steroid that acts as an anti-androgen by decreasing the production of testosterone, and by preventing all androgens, from binding to androgen receptors. Spiro also prevents aldosterone from binding to mineralocorticoid receptors in the adrenal glands (above kidneys) thus inhibiting sodium and water reabsorption and increasing potassium retention. The sodium/potassium balance can be disrupted as a result. Simply put, you need to drink large quantities of water to offset the tendency of water to not be reabsorbed in the kidneys.

Eat salt, not salt substitutes and limit potassium intake while on Spiro. This also results in needing to urinate very frequently. Results of a disrupted sodium/potassium balance can range from mild leg cramps to death. The muscles in your body require the balance be maintained, and don't forget that the heart is a muscle too.
